David Croft is a seasoned transactional attorney and chair of Meyers Roman's Business and Corporate Group, bringing a rare combination of legal acumen and executive-level business experience to his practice. As a former General Counsel and Chief Operating Officer, David offers a strategic, results-driven perspective that empowers clients to navigate complex business challenges with confidence and clarity.

With deep expertise in artificial intelligence, blockchain and cryptocurrency, data privacy and cybersecurity, intellectual property, mergers and acquisitions, and commercial contracts, David advises clients across the technology, manufacturing, and emerging industries. He represents a diverse clientele, including startups, established enterprises, and entrepreneurs in sectors such as software and hardware development, digital currency, manufacturing, distribution, service provision, video gaming, and medical marijuana. His ability to craft tailored agreements – spanning suppliers, manufacturers, distributors, vendors, service providers, and customers – ensures clients' interests are protected while maximizing their competitive edge.

David excels at guiding businesses through critical growth phases, from formation and investment to acquisitions and succession planning. His strategic counsel helps clients leverage market opportunities, safeguard intellectual property, and negotiate sophisticated deals with precision. As a trusted advisor, he combines industry-specific insight with a proactive approach to deliver measurable value to executives and business owners.
