Jesse M. Wilde brings a versatile litigation and business-law background to his practice at Meyers Roman. With experience across both litigation and transactional matters, Jesse advises clients facing complex business disputes, real estate issues, contract negotiations, and high-stakes commercial problems.

Jesse has represented clients in a broad range of litigation and transactional matters, including complex commercial disputes, real estate conflicts, contract negotiations, business breakups, emergency proceedings, and multimillion-dollar claims. His work often involves matters where legal issues, business realities, and interpersonal conflict overlap—requiring not only strong advocacy, but also strategic judgment and practical problem-solving. Whether a matter calls for litigation, negotiation, or a business-focused resolution, Jesse works to understand the client’s objectives, identify leverage, and develop a path forward that protects the client’s interests.

Known for his problem-solving mindset, Jesse enjoys matters where the facts are complicated, the stakes are high, and the path forward is not obvious. His litigation and transactional experience allow him to approach client issues from multiple angles, whether the matter calls for aggressive advocacy, careful negotiation, or a business-oriented resolution. That same practical, competitive approach informs Jesse’s growing interest in sports law, including the business, contractual, regulatory, and dispute-resolution issues that arise in athletics, athlete representation, sports organizations, and sports-related ventures.

Jesse’s background in finance and business informs his approach to advising clients whose legal issues are often inseparable from broader commercial realities. He understands that clients are not simply looking for legal analysis in a vacuum—they are looking for solutions that protect their interests, advance their goals, and make sense in the real world.
